WALKING THE CITY

Notes on streets, shade and everyday life

01 Begin at the corner

A walk begins with a little attention. The shade of a tree, a bench beside a shop and the space between two buildings can change how a street feels. Walking lets us notice what speed usually hides. A comfortable city leaves room for people to pause, look around and meet one another. A walk begins with a little attention. The shade of a tree, a bench beside a shop and the space between two buildings can change how a street feels. Walking lets us notice what speed usually hides. A comfortable city leaves room for people to pause, look around and meet one another.

A walk begins with a little attention. The shade of a tree, a bench beside a shop and the space between two buildings can change how a street feels. Walking lets us notice what speed usually hides. A comfortable city leaves room for people to pause, look around and meet one another. A walk begins with a little attention. The shade of a tree, a bench beside a shop and the space between two buildings can change how a street feels. Walking lets us notice what speed usually hides. A comfortable city leaves room for people to pause, look around and meet one another.

A street is a place to live, not only a place to pass through.

WALKING THE CITY

Notes on streets, shade and everyday life

02 Leave room to pause

A walk begins with a little attention. The shade of a tree, a bench beside a shop and the space between two buildings can change how a street feels. Walking lets us notice what speed usually hides. A comfortable city leaves room for people to pause, look around and meet one another. A walk begins with a little attention. The shade of a tree, a bench beside a shop and the space between two buildings can change how a street feels. Walking lets us notice what speed usually hides. A comfortable city leaves room for people to pause, look around and meet one another.

A walk begins with a little attention. The shade of a tree, a bench beside a shop and the space between two buildings can change how a street feels. Walking lets us notice what speed usually hides. A comfortable city leaves room for people to pause, look around and meet one another. A walk begins with a little attention. The shade of a tree, a bench beside a shop and the space between two buildings can change how a street feels. Walking lets us notice what speed usually hides. A comfortable city leaves room for people to pause, look around and meet one another.

A street is a place to live, not only a place to pass through.

WALKING THE CITY

Notes on streets, shade and everyday life

03 Under the shade

A walk begins with a little attention. The shade of a tree, a bench beside a shop and the space between two buildings can change how a street feels. Walking lets us notice what speed usually hides. A comfortable city leaves room for people to pause, look around and meet one another. A walk begins with a little attention. The shade of a tree, a bench beside a shop and the space between two buildings can change how a street feels. Walking lets us notice what speed usually hides. A comfortable city leaves room for people to pause, look around and meet one another.

A walk begins with a little attention. The shade of a tree, a bench beside a shop and the space between two buildings can change how a street feels. Walking lets us notice what speed usually hides. A comfortable city leaves room for people to pause, look around and meet one another. A walk begins with a little attention. The shade of a tree, a bench beside a shop and the space between two buildings can change how a street feels. Walking lets us notice what speed usually hides. A comfortable city leaves room for people to pause, look around and meet one another.

A street is a place to live, not only a place to pass through.

WALKING THE CITY

Notes on streets, shade and everyday life

04 The everyday street

A walk begins with a little attention. The shade of a tree, a bench beside a shop and the space between two buildings can change how a street feels. Walking lets us notice what speed usually hides. A comfortable city leaves room for people to pause, look around and meet one another. A walk begins with a little attention. The shade of a tree, a bench beside a shop and the space between two buildings can change how a street feels. Walking lets us notice what speed usually hides. A comfortable city leaves room for people to pause, look around and meet one another.

A walk begins with a little attention. The shade of a tree, a bench beside a shop and the space between two buildings can change how a street feels. Walking lets us notice what speed usually hides. A comfortable city leaves room for people to pause, look around and meet one another. A walk begins with a little attention. The shade of a tree, a bench beside a shop and the space between two buildings can change how a street feels. Walking lets us notice what speed usually hides. A comfortable city leaves room for people to pause, look around and meet one another.

A street is a place to live, not only a place to pass through.

WALKING THE CITY

Notes on streets, shade and everyday life

01 Begin at the corner

A walk begins with a little attention. The shade of a tree, a bench beside a shop and the space between two buildings can change how a street feels. Walking lets us notice what speed usually hides. A comfortable city leaves room for people to pause, look around and meet one another. A walk begins with a little attention. The shade of a tree, a bench beside a shop and the space between two buildings can change how a street feels. Walking lets us notice what speed usually hides. A comfortable city leaves room for people to pause, look around and meet one another.

A walk begins with a little attention. The shade of a tree, a bench beside a shop and the space between two buildings can change how a street feels. Walking lets us notice what speed usually hides. A comfortable city leaves room for people to pause, look around and meet one another. A walk begins with a little attention. The shade of a tree, a bench beside a shop and the space between two buildings can change how a street feels. Walking lets us notice what speed usually hides. A comfortable city leaves room for people to pause, look around and meet one another.

A street is a place to live, not only a place to pass through.

WALKING THE CITY

Notes on streets, shade and everyday life

02 Leave room to pause

A walk begins with a little attention. The shade of a tree, a bench beside a shop and the space between two buildings can change how a street feels. Walking lets us notice what speed usually hides. A comfortable city leaves room for people to pause, look around and meet one another. A walk begins with a little attention. The shade of a tree, a bench beside a shop and the space between two buildings can change how a street feels. Walking lets us notice what speed usually hides. A comfortable city leaves room for people to pause, look around and meet one another.

A walk begins with a little attention. The shade of a tree, a bench beside a shop and the space between two buildings can change how a street feels. Walking lets us notice what speed usually hides. A comfortable city leaves room for people to pause, look around and meet one another. A walk begins with a little attention. The shade of a tree, a bench beside a shop and the space between two buildings can change how a street feels. Walking lets us notice what speed usually hides. A comfortable city leaves room for people to pause, look around and meet one another.

A street is a place to live, not only a place to pass through.

WALKING THE CITY

Notes on streets, shade and everyday life

03 Under the shade

A walk begins with a little attention. The shade of a tree, a bench beside a shop and the space between two buildings can change how a street feels. Walking lets us notice what speed usually hides. A comfortable city leaves room for people to pause, look around and meet one another. A walk begins with a little attention. The shade of a tree, a bench beside a shop and the space between two buildings can change how a street feels. Walking lets us notice what speed usually hides. A comfortable city leaves room for people to pause, look around and meet one another.

A walk begins with a little attention. The shade of a tree, a bench beside a shop and the space between two buildings can change how a street feels. Walking lets us notice what speed usually hides. A comfortable city leaves room for people to pause, look around and meet one another. A walk begins with a little attention. The shade of a tree, a bench beside a shop and the space between two buildings can change how a street feels. Walking lets us notice what speed usually hides. A comfortable city leaves room for people to pause, look around and meet one another.

A street is a place to live, not only a place to pass through.

WALKING THE CITY

Notes on streets, shade and everyday life

04 The everyday street

A walk begins with a little attention. The shade of a tree, a bench beside a shop and the space between two buildings can change how a street feels. Walking lets us notice what speed usually hides. A comfortable city leaves room for people to pause, look around and meet one another. A walk begins with a little attention. The shade of a tree, a bench beside a shop and the space between two buildings can change how a street feels. Walking lets us notice what speed usually hides. A comfortable city leaves room for people to pause, look around and meet one another.

A walk begins with a little attention. The shade of a tree, a bench beside a shop and the space between two buildings can change how a street feels. Walking lets us notice what speed usually hides. A comfortable city leaves room for people to pause, look around and meet one another. A walk begins with a little attention. The shade of a tree, a bench beside a shop and the space between two buildings can change how a street feels. Walking lets us notice what speed usually hides. A comfortable city leaves room for people to pause, look around and meet one another.

A street is a place to live, not only a place to pass through.